ORATORICAL BATTLE OVER BOXING BILL

West and McCue Stage Tilt Before New York Senate Judiciary Committee.

ALBANY, N. Y., March 19.—George H. West, reformer andponent of restoration of amateur boxing in the state through legislative enactment, and Assemblyman Martin G. McCue of New York, one-time pugilist and advocate of boxing, were principals in a short session yesterday afternoon before the senate judiciary committee, and there lacking a decision on the measure, united in fearing the revision of the bill, which would effect legislation on the sport.

Old time boxers, including Jack Skelly, Sam Kelly and Jim Barton joined with McCue and a delegation of sporting writers from New York and Buffalo in support of some measure to bring the game back into the good graces of the law. It differed among themselves as to the provision to be incorporated in a bill, and particularly over the question of whether decisions should be rendered.

Reformer West wanted no time getting down to business while he entered the "ring." He led with an attack on the brutality of boxing and quickly followed with a blow at official decisions which, he declared, would open the door for carrying on of brutal fights. McCue contented himself with querying West, continued his attack, saying that professional boxing is dangerous to good health, integrity of participants and pointed out that there have been 47 deaths in the United States directly attributable to the game.

Mr. West also objected to the Gibbs bill, because he said it if passed, would try to stage the Wilfred Dempsey title match in New York state, which, according to Mr. West, would be an incentive to gambling. He declared that the New York Civic league, which he represented, was not opposed to amateur boxing, but he pleaded with the legislature to cut out professionalism in the bill and that they want to make money out of it."

McCue countered strongly when he said that "any man who opposes boxing is a moneymonger, and a moneymonger is not fitted to trail around with decent company." He declared that boxing is a real man's sport enjoyed by real men, and warned the members of the judiciary committee that the men who fought the Hun are coming back and want boxing, and that if they don't get it, they are going to do something to say extraction day.

Mr. McCue declared that his bill would not receive fair action in the legislature, unless it was amended, and he offered some suggestions.

A number of local fans have signified their intentions of going to the fight, which is to be held next Wednesday night.
